HOLYOKE – Officials from the Girls Scouts Council of Western Massachusetts (GSCWM) broke ground on a $1.5 million service center Monday morning. City and state officials joined executives and members from the organization for the ceremony.

The 9,380 square-foot building will be located at 301 Kelly Way, just off Balboa Road in West Holyoke. A grand opening is planned for November. The new facility will serve over 14,000 girls from kindergarten through 12th grade.

The council includes 5,000 adult volunteers in 186 communities in Central and Western Massachusetts. When completed, the service center will employ 25 persons. The new

Bathed in blue for Autism Awareness

City buildings participate in "Light it up Blue"

HOLYOKE – The City of Holyoke will participate in "Light it Up Blue," a global initiative organized by Autism Speaks. Iconic structures like City Hall will be cast in blue light to raise awareness about autism.

Mayor Alex B. Morse instructed the Department of Public Works to light up City Hall for the month of April. Fire stations across the city and some local businesses will join in. Morse plans to issue a mayoral proclamation on Monday.

State Sen. Michael R. Knapik (R-Westfield) confirmed the Massachusetts State House will also be bathed in blue light. Knapik made the request through the building's superintendent.

Since 2007, the United Nations General Assembly has declared April 2 as World Autism Awareness Day. National and international landmarks will be illuminated, too, such as Rockefeller Center in New York City, the Tokyo Tower in Japan and the Sydney Opera House in Australia.

According to the latest figures, 1 in 110 children are diagnosed with the broad-spectrum condition. One in 70 boys fall on the autism spectrum. Between 2002 and 2006, the prevalence of autism rose 57 percent, while more children will be diagnosed with the condition than AIDS, diabetes and cancer combined.

Jill Horvitz, an Autism Specialist at Metcalf School, will set up an informational table in the school's cafeteria. Metcalf will also hold a bake sale, with the proceeds being used to purchase sensory equipment for children in the school's Autism Program.

Holyoke City Treasurer Jon D. Lumbra, whose daughter, Sophia, 4, has autism, said the effort is to heighten awareness about autism, a serious health issue for children and an often-misunderstood condition. Sofia participates in Metcalf's autism program. "It's something very near and dear to my wife and I," said Lumbra.

He said one of the challenges is dealing with the Restoration project reclaims 'The Dingle'

By Dennis P. Hohenberger

HOLYOKE – The Dingle has led students to a good education for generations. Like changing shifts in a mill, students from Holyoke High School and the William R. Peck School pass each other along the hilly route, first in the early morning and then the late afternoon.

Time, erosion and the endless stream of students have worn down the path. Volunteers are needed on April 21 to clean up and restore the area that runs parallel along Beech Street. An informational meeting is scheduled for March 30.

Stacey Funston, a Promise Fellow through AmeriCorps, is leading the restoration project, "Reclaiming the Dingle." The project came about through her work as the 8th and 9th grade transition coordinator at Peck.

She said little has been done over the years for upkeep or slowing down erosion in the Dingle, a densely wooded area. "We've been needing some help for a while," said Funston. The project entails shoring up the path, a thorough cleaning, planting shrubs and trees, and several art projects.

The Parks & Rec Department and the School Department maintenance staff have offered their assistance. AmeriCorps will provide volunteers for the clean up, which happens to fall on the organization's National Day Service.

Spotlighting student literacy

City Council approves 'All American City Award' application

By Dennis P. Hohenberger
 Turley Publications
 Correspondent

HOLYOKE – The Holyoke City Council recently approved a motion that allows the city to submit an application for the "All American City Grade Level Reading Awards." If approved, the city can apply for educational and literacy grants through major philanthropic organizations.

Councilors Aaron Vega and Jason Ferreira introduced the motion, and included sponsors Kevin Jourdain, Gladys Lebron-Martinez and Anthony Soto. Councilors unanimously passed the motion.

If we have students who don't know how to read by third grade at a proficient literacy rate, the gap is going to continue and they're going to fall behind."

- Aaron Vega

Vega said the initiative puts a focus on getting children to read proficiently by third grade. Studies have shown that if a child is not a proficient reader by third grade, the child will likely struggle academically from then on.

Up to third grade, said Vega, children learn to read and not read to learn. "If we have students who don't know how to read by third grade at a proficient literacy rate, the gap is going to continue and they're going to fall behind," he said.

Vega said the literacy gap has become "everyone's concern," as even business leaders speak of an unprepared workforce. "When we look at Dean Tech and the graduation rates, everything is together, he said. "What we have here is a complex problem with lots of different issues feeding it."

School Committee Member Michael Moriarty, who authored

the grant, said only 21 percent of Holyoke third graders read at the proficient level. The School Committee established a goal that by 2014, 85 percent of Holyoke third graders will read proficiently.

Third graders recently took the English Language Arts portion of the MCAS Exam. Results will not be available until fall. Mary Curro, director Early Childhood Education for the Holyoke Public Schools, is leading the Early Learning Task Force.

Moriarty said the 85 percent goal is common in the state's most successful school districts. "We believe it's doable. There are other communities that have huge gains in short periods of time," he said. "It's about an entire community, as well as the entire school department, recognizing the importance and urgency of this, and changing some of the practices that are done at home and at school to educate young children."

He said the statewide and objective use of MCAS revealed that Holyoke third graders are far behind their counterparts, even when compared to other urban communities.

Governor Deval Patrick visited a Chicopee middle school last week, where he spoke about his administration's Gateway Cities Educational Agenda. Holyoke and 23 other communities in Massachusetts have been designated as Gateway Communities.

As a turnaround district with Level IV schools, said Moriarty, Holyoke has been recognized by the Massachusetts Department of Early Education and Care (MDEEC) as having some of the greatest needs.

Moriarty said a "widespread outreach" involving churches, businesses, pediatricians and non-profit organizations will aid in the citywide effort. A community work group is assessing a number of children who need preschool and the spaces available to them.

facility will replace centers in Leeds, Worcester and East Longmeadow.

Girl Scout Junior Emma Norman, a bright and enthusiastic 9-year-old, welcomed guests and introduced speakers. Norman told the audience that she plans on being a Girl Scout "for a very long time."

"How cool that this place brings this all together for girls to experience," she said.

She was later joined by Girl Scout Brownie Esme Powers, 9, for the closing address.

Patti Hallberg, the CEO of GSCWM, said on March 12 the organization celebrated their centennial. She said the organization represents 2.3 million girls and close to one million volunteers. "It's a place that will meet the needs and the challenges of girls in the 21st Century," she said. "A place that works for us as we move from our first 100 years into our next hundred years."

Holyoke Mayor Alex B. Morse said, "This a demonstration of government and the private sector working together to make sure Holyoke is home for what will be a beautiful facility." He said even more important than bringing 25 new jobs to the city, is "the thousands and thousands cookies" that will be available.

He added the proximity to Route 91 and the MassPike makes the service center accessible to most of Massachusetts.

Ward 5 Councilor Linda Vacon, who spoke, said her Girl Scout training comes in handy during the often tough City Council meetings. She led past and current Girl Scouts, with the traditional two fingers raised, in the organization's pledge.

Helene Florio, a former Girl Scout, represented State Sen. Michael R. Knapik (R-Westfield), who was unable to attend the ceremony. Florio proudly wore several pins she earned as a Girl Scout. State Rep. Michael F. Kane (D-Holyoke) presented a proclamation from the Massachusetts Legislature.

Holyoke Chamber of Commerce President Doris Ransford and Allison Lane, GSCWM board president, also spoke.

Esme Powers, the final speaker, said she loves Girl Scouts for the "special friendships" she has made. She said her troop recently made a trip to New York City and will travel to Washington, D.C. in June. Emma Norman shouted it was time for everyone to grab a shovel and "dig for the future of Girl Scouts."

For the past year, the group has worked closely with MDEEC in ensuring literacy programs in Holyoke are of the right quality, said Moriarty.

The group will also seek ways to improve data management, which can better understand summer learning loss, absenteeism, and a "vigorous" assessment of children who are behind well before they enter the third grade. Additional data can be culled from the MCAS results.

He said a "struggle" continues in finding the right tools for English Language Learners.

On Monday, ten city leaders participated in a nationwide web conference on the All American City Program, which will prepare them to be peer reviewers. Participants included Mayor Alex B. Morse, School Superintendent David Dupont, Holyoke Community College President William Messner and state educational officials.
